

Designing contemporary online teaching cases

James Farmer and Dale Holt

Deakin University, Institute of Teaching and Learning

In 2004, the Teaching and Learning Support Unit of Deakin University received a Strategic Teaching and Learning Grant to construct an online environment through which to disseminate cases of innovative practices in the use of Deakin Studies Online (DSO).

These were conceived of as resources which would contribute significantly to institutional professional development activities including the development of a Graduate Certificate in Higher Education. The dissemination of these stories of practice across faculties aimed at breaking down boundaries within the university and improving quality in teaching and learning.

This short paper aims to describe the experience in conceptualising, designing and implementing the project. The completed website will be demonstrated and participants invited to access the resources from their own institutions.
